IMPORTANT INFORMATION
DEWORMING - Regular deworming is essential for the continued health of your pet. There are specific treatments for different types of internal parasites. Indiscriminate deworming by pet owners can be ineffective and even detrimental. Consult your veterinarian. VACCINATION - After the initial puppy/kitten vaccination course administered by your veterinarian, please make sure that you call on him/her for an annual health check/revaccination, which is the only reliable method to ensure optimal protection for your pet. - Animals must be in good health at the time of vaccination. - This will be determined by your veterinarian who is the only professional adequately trained and qualified to perform this clinical examination. RABIES - Rabies is a terrifying and invariably fatal disease affecting human and other mammalian species throughout the world. The disease is spread almost exclusively by the bite (saliva) of the infected carnivorous animal, e.g. dog, cat, jackal, meerkat. - There is no cure for this deadly disease once symptoms appear. One of the first symptoms of rabies is a definite change in the animal's disposition. Wild animals appear "tame". - There are two types of rabies, the furious type which is typified by restlessness and aggressiveness and the dumb type in which the animal becomes paralysed, salivates and may have a "dumb" expression. - Any suspected rabies case must be reported to the local State Veterinarian. BABESIOSIS ("TICK FEVER" / "BILIARY FEVER") EHRlichiosis ("TICK BITE FEVER") - There are no vaccines against these serious tickborne diseases. - Effective tick control will reduce the risk of infection. MEDICAL INSURANCE FOR PETS To help you cope financially with the cost of caring for your pet, consider taking out medical insurance. For a relatively small month premium, a significant portion of your vet bills will be covered, leaving you in a position to afford better care.
